

RESPECTFUL RELATIONSHIPS EDUCATION

Professional learning for a whole school approach

RESPECTability

Research and Education for Social Progress,
Equity and Community Transformation

RESPECTability supports school communities, from Prep to Year 12, to take a holistic approach to:

- developing social and emotional wellbeing for girls and boys
- preventing bullying and violence
- cultivating inclusive and caring environments
- maximising academic outcomes for all
- supporting responsive curriculum, assessment and pedagogy design and enactment
- building communities of inquiry and professional networks

This program includes two split days of workshops, resources, and critical friend support for your school or cluster. Places are limited to maximise discussion and feedback.

RESPECTability is a service provided by Dr Jennifer Nayler and Maria Delaney. We draw on contemporary evidence concerning violence prevention, and guidance from national and state authorities, to provide comprehensive and innovative professional learning and support for planning and implementing sustainable change across communities. We welcome opportunities to negotiate tailored services for your school or regional community. Contact us for more information.

Maria is a former primary school teacher and education policy worker, with a background in gender and cultural studies. She supports schools and organisations to design, implement and evaluate anti-bullying, gender equity, and respectful relationships education programs.
